A FAITHLESS FRIEND

Gets His Deserts at the Hands of His Victim.

SHOT DOWN IN HIS PERfidious LIKE A DOG

The Guilty Partner of His Sin Reserved for a Worse Fate—Doomed to Live as a Target for the Finger of Scorn.

Paris, Feb. 10.—A brief dispatch from Cannes announces the killing of M. Emile Abellie, a Frenchman, by Mr. Edward Parker Deacon, a prominent American banker of Paris, who returned unexpectedly to Cannes and found Abellie in his wife's room in a compromising position.

Another account says that Mr. Deacon looked angry at the door of his wife's room, upon arriving at the hotel, and when the latter admitted him, it was clear from the appearance of both Mrs. Deacon and M. Abellie, who was in her company, that the husband had good grounds to conclude that his wife had been unfaithful to him. She is said to have fallen upon her knees and to have implored Mr. Deacon to have mercy upon her, and the latter seems to have been content to turn his wife upon the guilty friend, who is now reported to have died from the effects of the shot he received at Mr. Deacon's hands. The affair has caused the wildest kind of excitement in Cannes, and it finds startling echo here where all the parties concerned are well known. Both Mr. and Mrs. Deacon are connected with some of the best families in the United States.

Mr. Deacon, after shooting M. Abellie, is reported to have sent several cable messages to the United States and Paris, and to have quietly submitted to arrest.

Rumor has it that Mr. Deacon's unexpected return to Cannes was caused by the receipt of an anonymous letter, and to have been written by a jealous woman, who notified the American banker that if he returned to the Hotel Splendide at a certain hour, without giving his wife any warning, he would undoubtedly find her in a compromising position with one of his (Mr. Deacon's) best friends.

Mrs. Deacon is said to be utterly prostrated with grief and shame, and to have announced her intention of taking her own life.

Later details thus received here show that Mr. Deacon reached the Hotel Splendide in his return from this city at midnight almost to the minute, and that after exchanging a few words with the hotel porter on duty, he went straight to his wife's bedroom. Mrs. Deacon, it appears, had no idea that her husband would return so soon. She had parted with him on the understanding that he would remain in Paris for some days. Indeed, Mrs. Deacon is said to have sent the wife a telegram, announcing his safe arrival here, and to have started back for Cannes soon afterwards.

When Mr. Deacon last entered his wife's bedroom he found, the story has it, his wife in bed, and M. Abellie standing partly naked by her bedside, evidently having sprung out of bed with the intention of escaping from Mrs. Deacon's apartments when he heard the noise at the door caused by Mr. Deacon's unexpected return. Mr. Deacon, according to reports, bravely reproached his wife, while he kept M. Abellie covering under the barrel of a pistol which he held pointed at the Frenchman's breast.

After having reproached his wife, who moaned with fear, crawled from the bed and fell upon her knees and piteously pleaded for him to forgive her, the American issued orders to his right-hand man, M. Abellie, who had professed the utmost friendship for the man he had deceived and who had thus been able to turn himself into the conditions of the too confiding husband. After hurling some bitter, contemptuous words at M. Abellie, Mr. Deacon fired three shots at the half-naked Frenchman, who screamed with agony and fell back on the bed before the bed of the wife of the friend he had so basely deceived.

Mr. Deacon, after gazing for a moment with supreme contempt at the lifeless body of his wife's lover, is said to have turned once more to his wife, who was shivering and trembling, pale with the agony of death, on her knees close to the spot where her lover lay bathed in his blood, and to have said in substance:

"I have a good mind to kill you; I have killed that dirty dog; but, killing is too good for you. You shall be reserved for a worse fate. You shall live to have the finger of scorn pointed at you during the rest of your life. Never let me see your deceitful face again."

Mrs. Deacon, at these words, it is claimed, gave a long shriek of horror and fell flat on her face. She was picked up insensible by the hotel attendants and a crowd of guests who had rushed to the scene of the tragedy, attracted by the sound of the shooting. In falling the guilty woman had been spattered herself with some of the blood of her dead lover, and the first impression formed by the hotel servants and guests who appeared upon the scene, was that Mr. Deacon had killed his wife after or before killing her paramour. But she revived shortly after being placed upon the bed she had dishonored and piteously begged to be conducted to another room.

The body of M. Abellie, in the meanwhile, had been placed in an adjoining apartment, and Mrs. Deacon's four young children, who were stopping at the hotel with their parents, were connected to another part of the building, where their father and kind friends did their best to pacify them. It was not until late in the afternoon that Mr. Deacon had the sympathy of everybody in and about the hotel, and that even the police officials were loath to interfere with him, for he was allowed to pass the rest of the night at the Hotel Splendide without being taken into custody, and he could have escaped a hundred times over had he so desired. It is difficult to imagine the sensation this tragedy has caused, not only among the Americans abroad, but among all foreigners travelling in Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Deacon lived in the highest class of continental society. They were leaders at all the balls, fetes, receptions, races, charitable meetings and other social gatherings frequented by the very best people on the continent. They were received by everybody and were known to thousands of people in the best circles. They had always been admired by their friends and were looked upon as being a most happy, devoted couple, proud of their four young children, and satisfied in every way with their condition in life. They seemed to be wealthy, lived in a first-class style, and their names were to be found upon all the lists of subscribers to charitable or social funds. Mrs. Deacon was a most attractive woman, who was considered to be naturally the object of considerable attention upon the part of the gentlemen. Mrs. Deacon, it was noticed, seemed to take pleasure in being so counted upon and seemed to delight in her position in the circles of so many admirers as possible. Nobody, however, for a moment imagined that she was engaged in anything more than the most legitimate relations, and the person who would have suggested that she could be unfaithful to her many American husband would have been looked upon as a person of a defective mind.

It is true that, recently, it was whispered that M. Emile Abellie, who was so well known in society, was a little too attentive to charming Mrs. Deacon, but then it was added, he was a great friend of Mr. Deacon, and that seemed to explain matters to the satisfaction of most everybody.

M. Abellie was a prominent man-about-town, an ex-athlete of one of the French legations and a bachelor. He seemed to have plenty of money, was a member of several social clubs, a grand stock, a distinguished yachtman and a good singer of race horses. He was also an accomplished musician and had all the little-tattle of the day at his finger tips. In addition he was handsome and had the art of flattering women until their heads were turned. M. Abellie had known the Deacons for a long time, and there is no known history of intimacy with Mrs. Deacon has lasted.

Deacon and His Wife Well Known in Newport, R. I.

Newport, R. I., Feb. 15.—The Deacons, who were at Newport at the time of the tragedy, were well known to the residents of the town. Peter Parker, a wealthy, eccentric, and well known Bostonian, came here as long ago as 1854 and had a cottage at what was the corner of Bellevue street and Dixon street, but the latter thoroughfare of Bellevue avenue was named Parker avenue in honor of the old Bostonian. He had a large house, and his wife, who was the year named, came here as one of the most dashing and beautiful widows Newport ever knew. Her husband died a few years after marriage. She brought with her to her new home two children, Mrs. Deacon and Edward Parker Deacon, the daughter dying here within a very few years of her mother's death. Mrs. Deacon was a woman of great hospitality and was a very general favorite.

Society was astonished some years ago by the announcement of the engagement of young Edward Deacon to Miss Baldwin, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Admiral C. H. Baldwin, U. S. N.

MR. FOSTER'S REPLY

Why the Four-and-a-Half Per Cent Was Continued

AT A MUCH LOWER RATE OF INTEREST

It Was Considered to be Good Financing and Was Ample Justified by Law as Well as Precedent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Secretary Foster sent the following letter to Speaker Crisp:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 19, 1892.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the resolution of the house of representatives, dated the 18th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be, and he is hereby required to inform the house of representatives at any time since the four-and-a-half per cent bonds are issued, whether they are sufficient funds in the treasury to pay the same, and if so, whether he has seen to it that the same are continued at a rate of interest of 4 per cent, interest, and why the same were not paid at the time said bonds were due.

In reply I have to state that the bonds of the 4 1/2 per cent loan became redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after September 1, 1891. They did not become due on that date, and the provisions of the act of Congress, by which they were authorized, provided that they should be continued at a rate of interest of 4 per cent, interest, and why the same were not paid at the time said bonds were due.

The amount of the per cent bonds continued, since July 1, 1891, was $50,000,000, and the balance in the treasury August 31, 1891, before any of them had been redeemed was $30,274,244.85. In view of the reduction of available funds, the secretary of the treasury, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress, continued the same at a rate of interest of 4 per cent, interest, and why the same were not paid at the time said bonds were due.

The act of Congress, passed July 1, 1891, provided that the bonds should be continued at a rate of interest of 4 per cent, interest, and why the same were not paid at the time said bonds were due.

The act of Congress, passed July 1, 1891, provided that the bonds should be continued at a rate of interest of 4 per cent, interest, and why the same were not paid at the time said bonds were due.
